Earthcycle™ Trays & Punnets

CASE STUDIES

With its organic tomato program growing double digits, one large North American greenhouse grower approached CKF, Inc. to develop packaging that would speak to organic consumers. The result is our top sealable 10 oz pint container.

The container supports the organic consumer's demand for recyclability, compostability and a reduction in plastic with its use of an Earthcycle base with a top seal lid. The entire package has 90% less plastic than a traditional clamshell, using 22% less oil in production and emitting 53% less greenhouse gas.

"We believe we are in line with what the organic consumer wants, less plastic and a flavorful product. We've seen a sizable jump in our organic sales since we introduced our new packaging," said the Director of Sales and Business Development of the North American Greenhouse Grower.

In seeking ways to help their customers reduce food waste, a global retailer was looking for solutions to keep its packaged mushrooms fresher for longer. In studies with their suppliers, it was found that Earthcycle packaging can extend shelf life by 2-3 days compared to plastic packaging. It is a bonus that the punnets are home compostable and recyclable.

A large, year round berry grower has adopted the Earthcycle base with a top sealable lid for its substantial volume in organic blueberries. Aside from the sustainability benefits, the top seal lidding film allows for high impact graphics and messaging. According to our client, "retailers like the colorful display and they can clearly differentiate the berries as organic as opposed to conventionally grown."

"We love the Earthcycle base with top seal film as we think it gives more of the organic look. I am waiting for our organic TOVs to convert to this ASAP. My goal is to get all my organic tomatoes in these."— Buyer, National Grocery Chain.

A large organic greenhouse rebranded their line of tomatoes and a key element was the packaging. Our customer wanted the packaging to be consistent with their corporate sustainability goals, so chose our compostable and recyclable material. We created a custom tray that would work for three different tomato varieties, which is flow wrapped with printed film. The new packaging is a hit with retailers and has led to a substantial increase in sales for the grower.
